He made several circuits of the track at better than 105 miles an hour, and went six miles in 3:19 2-5, according to the stop watch held by Sam Sec. vetor an starter of a hundred speed races. "There is not a driver entered," said Eddle Rickenbacher, "who is not capable of doing a hundred miles an hour for the entire distance."

Asked in what position he expected to finish, barring accidents, the modest driver of the Maxwell said: "Oh, I suppose in about third place, unless I should be particularly fortunate. You see, some of these foreign cars, like the Peugeot, for example, are capable of a higher maximum of speed than our American cars. That means that I will have to use my head a little better than the other fellows, if I am to win. I believe that the winner will average about 108 miles an hour.
